I actually met him at PKC 2012 and briefly talked with him about NIST jobs then! I'll see you that week!

Very good, Jacob.

In the week of March 14 -18, Daniel Smith-Tony will be on site in the Gaithersburg campus. He is a team member and also a professor in University of Louisville. In the same week, we may have some visitors. I will let you know when the meetings will be arranged.

I believe you explained the teamwork and external community aspect of the PQC position pretty well, and that was actually a plus for me over a pure research position.

I can definitely be a strong team player in the massive project of PQC standardization. Also, at least in the academic world, I have relationships with many researchers in the area that I can call on to, for instance, work with their students on submissions to a 'contest' for specific schemes to be standardized. I would definitely like to come back to NIST several more times in the next month or two to get a better idea of what I would be doing with the other Group Members.

Let me know when would be good to come in. Thanks!

Hi, Jacob:

Thanks for the e-mail. We are still working on the details about the position. One aspect is that it will not be a pure research position. The hired will be involved in PQC standards activities, which requires teamwork and interactive with external community, which I mentioned to you before but probably did not emphasize it clearly. Would you mind to share some of your thoughts in this aspect? I should have created some opportunities for you to come to NIST and interactive more with the team members in the past month. I will do it in the next a couple of months. This will also let you know if you think the position fits you.

I fully understand the timing about job hunting. Please let me know for any questions and any thoughts.

Thanks,

Lily

Hi,

You'd mentioned it would be a month or two for you to get the posting up on USAJobs for the position I am potentially being hired for.

Do you have any idea when that will be up? NIST is my first choice for employment next year, and I would really like to be able to finish the hiring process sooner rather than later for peace of mind (to avoid having to look for and schedule interviews for other potential positions).

Thanks in advance!
